The French Paradox Many French people love eating cheese. French cooking often involves meat, rich sauces and buttery desserts. Usually when people eat a lot of fatty foods, there is a danger of heart and other health problems. This is true in a country like the United States. The paradox – or thing that doesn't make sense – is that the French suffer far less from these kinds of problems, compared with some other countries. This is the French paradox. No one is sure, but some believe it's due to red wine. Many doctors think a glass or two of red wine each day is good for the heart.

Everyone has stress in their lives. Stress is the way our body reacts to what is happening in and around us. Eustress, or good stress, can help people work to their potential and feel good about themselves. Think about a time when your boss told you what a good job you were doing, or you were excited playing a game. That is eustress. Sometimes it is called positive stress. On the other hand, distress, or bad stress, is not a good thing. When stress becomes too much for a person to deal with, it can cause problems. The problems can be physical or mental. Stress can result in problems like insomnia, headaches, depression and anxiety. Obviously, we want as much eustress, and as little distress, in our lives as possible.

Hi, Nathan.

Thanks for your email. I've (provided answers) to all of your questions.

The answer to (your first question) about the environment is that it's a pretty serious work atmosphere. All employees have to wear business attire every day, and everyone has their own cubicle.

Second, here are (some details) about the local area: The area around the office is great for eating and shopping, and there are plenty of places to have lunch and socialize.

In answer to your final question about (work-life balance) , most people here work 40 hours a week, more or less. I get about three weeks' vacation each year.

Thanks.

Giles

Subject: Your questions about the company

Hi, Jessica.

Thanks for your email. I've provided answers to all of your questions.

The answer to your first question about the environment is that it's a pretty serious work atmosphere. All employees have to wear business attire every day, and everyone has their own cubicle.

In answer to your final question about work-life balance, most people here work 40 hours a week, more or less. I get about three weeks' vacation each year. And yes, people here do socialize together sometimes. The area around the office is great for eating and shopping, and there are plenty of places to have lunch.

See you soon!

Jessica
